L.C. Greenwood

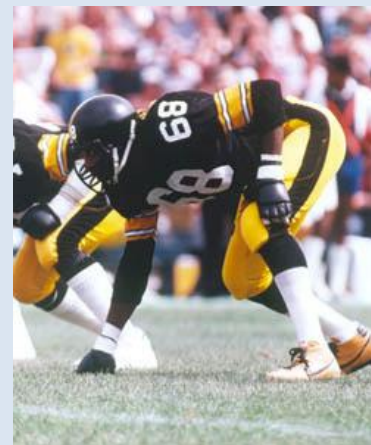

When L.C. Greenwood stepped on the field, he wore gold shoes while the rest of his teammates wore black -- every game. As a result, the Pittsburgh Steelers were fined for a uniform violation -- every game. But how could they complain with four Super Bowl victories and seven division titles? From 1969-1981, Greenwood created enough problems for quarterbacks that translated into success for the Steelers. One of his best games came in Super Bowl IX when he deflected three of Fran Tarkenton's passes. In Super Bowl X, he sacked Roger Staubach three times. At 6-foot-6, 250 pounds, he unofficially recorded 73 1/2 sacks and 14 fumble recoveries during his career. As part of the legendary 'Steel Curtain,' Greenwood played on the left side with Joe Greene and the right with Ernie Holmes and Dwight White. Greenwood was named All-AFC four times in his career and played in six Pro Bowls.

In 1969, the same year the Steelers drafted Joe Greene, the team chose L.C. in the 10th round out of Arkansas Pine Bluff. In college, L.C. played both defensive end and tackle for three years. He was named defensive MVP by the team and was also Ebony All-America his senior season. In his first two years with the Steelers, Greenwood was a reserve but finally earned starter status in the 1971 season and led the team with 8 1/2 sacks.

Currently LC resides in Pittsburgh and is president and owner of Greenwood Enterprises, an electrical supply, coal, natural gas and construction company.
